Andreas Fahl Status: In progress Verdict: Useful for developers and businesses that need to monitor their activities. An auto industry lobbying group has quietly stopped pushing for an extension of federal tax incentives to fuel a new wave of production of electric vehicles because it is too costly to deal with issues surrounding climate change, the source told Bloomberg News Monday. The National Automobile Dealers Association (NADA) hasn't quite pulled the plug on the carmaker grants yet, but it is not in a hurry to push lawmakers for legislation to extend them in 2014, the source said.

“They want it, but in this day and age, there are too many hurdles to get it done,” the source said, without elaborating on the hurdles. The source emphasized NADA still supports extending the vehicle production incentives, saying that although the association is concerned about the environmental ramifications, it is not sure how long-lasting those incentives will be. When Congress extended similar incentives, the law that originally established them expired and auto makers had to return to the cap-and-trade market to negotiate the price of carbon allowances. This has caused an increase in the price of the allowances, and manufacturers are challenged to recover the cost of the tax credits that underlay those prices. “We think it’s a very good program,” the source said. “We’re certainly not going to take it off the table.” NADA has been pushing lawmakers to extend the incentives — along with the other federal fuel economy standards — for the past year, a source said, but now, it is focusing on issues of climate change and long-term strategy. The House and Senate will introduce their versions of the fuel economy bill next week, but environmentalists and liberal Democrats are trying to tie the fuel economy standards to legislation requiring a “cap-and-trade” system to lower greenhouse gas emissions, something that they believe will prove impossible without incentives for electric cars. “They are calculating that without a global-warming rider in the larger energy reform bill, they are not going to get the cap-and-trade system through the House and Senate,” the source said. “At this point, they are not going to press the issue.” The source said the lobbying industry has learned over the last few years to not insist that members follow their lobbying, but

---

---
